

Emergency Planning

The definition of Emergency Planning:

'Development and maintenance of agreed procedures to prevent, reduce, control, mitigate and take other actions in the event of an emergency.' (source: direct.gov.uk)

Emergency Planning is about:

- Strategic Mitigation Gold
- Tactical Control Silver
- Operational preparedness Bronze

Securing your company's survival requires a planned approach to be able to deal with the inevitable fallout should disaster strike. History has proven that there is no scope for complacency or ill-conceived or out of date plans.

Maintaining a constant state of readiness requires regular testing of company specific scenarios in order to create confidence in your team's ability to deal with any emergency situation or business disruption.

Ensuring the future of your business requires incident responders to have a thorough grasp of their personal role and responsibilities. Their skills need to equal the risks and demands of your premises.

Safeguarding your company's reputation requires more than simply a physical response to an emergency. Interaction with stakeholders, suppliers and customers is equally as important. Expert communication skills are a pre-requisite to securing and protecting reputation.

Development of your emergency plan should be based on the identification of your site's risk potential, together with consequential analysis to secure effective strategies enabling you to manage both on and off-site consequences.

So how can we help?

We have many years of practical experience in dealing with all types of emergency situations. During this time we have developed rapport with regulators and local authorities and have a comprehensive understanding of a broad spectrum of legislation.

Legislative pressures place a huge burden on organisations, particularly in today's climate – we can give you the freedom to focus on your business. As practitioners in all aspects of Integrated Emergency Management solutions, we are well placed to recognise potential areas for improvement. We can help you identify gaps and determine the best way to tackle them in the fastest and most cost effective manner.

Our primary aim is to help you protect your business and safeguard your reputation in the long term.
